Wey-Hey-Hey!

Race at a slow pace!

Written and photographed by Peter Frost

There I was, enjoying a nice Christmas lunch with a walking group, when one of my co-walkers said "You shoot video, don't you? Will you film the Guildford Charity Raft Race?" It must have been the alcohol, because I stuttered "Yes".

So, in last month's Border Post on the back page, I left you with this teaser and the heading 'The Start of Something Big'. (photo top left) And it was! Twenty six rafts, all with a Movie Theme and rafters in carnival atmosphere, 'racing' from Guildford's Town Lock downstream to the Watercraft Centre. This is about 2 - 2.5 miles for rafters to cover, setting off from Guildford town in close stages, some with the energy to cover the distance in about 35 minutes, others in a good hour or more. If they didn't sink on the way - and some did!

I appealed for help through Border Post and John Ivil and Philip Morley came on board (so to speak!). It was then a matter of several meetings on location so I could decide the best tactics for reasonable coverage. Emails followed and we were as ready as we'd ever be.

Luckily, it was a dry sunny day and warm, as long as you didn't end up in the river. Gradually rafts arrived and were assembled and titivated prior to Mayoral inspection and judging for 'Best Decorated'. Some of the most interesting shots were of rafts being carried over the narrow pedestrian bridge to the grassy 'island' where they'd be launched. Wide rafts and narrow bridge were something of a challenge but they all made it.

Film Themes such as The Smurfs, Baywatch (very popular as there were three of those!), The Lion King, The Flintstones, Rock School, The Cask Aways (good pun) and Dad's Army which was constructed and entered by a group of new Dads, and one of them had the surname of Pike!

Without too much warning, they were off and now the crowds were at least three deep all along the bank and the footbridge was virtually blocked as people leaned over both sides, watching. Some were crossing one way with pushchairs and others in the opposite direction. It was exceptionally difficult to struggle over the bridge or get a view of the rafts from either the bridge or the bank but between the three of us, we have good footage. Editing, as I write this, is a thing of the future.

There was a plan. We all shot the assembly point from different positions, then John and I stayed at the start as rafts set off while Philip followed the early ones down stream. John and I would then drive down to pick Philip up and drop me off. I would walk downstream with the rafts, John and Philip drove down to the finish. Here, John waited for arrivals to shoot while Philip walked back up river getting more coverage and to meet me coming down.

The carnival atmosphere at the start followed the rafters down the river. From bridges, banks and gardens, they were pelted with water bombs and squirted with large water pistols. Although they had munitions on board, as they had to paddle, they were less able to retaliate and if their raft didn't sink, it certainly felt as though they were under water!

And as they neared the end of their journey, there was a massive barrage of bombs and water from two gardens.

Some rafters had been sitting in water all the way as their rafts turned out to be less buoyant than planned. Painted faces, raft graphics, and the rafters themselves looked rather less colourful and decidedly more drenched when they reached the finish line.

One of the most useful pieces of equipment for this project, was the HiViz vests that I had printed up for each of us. These identified us and gave us authority to barge in. I don't know how many times I heard "we're on TV" or was asked when it was in TV. So we must have looked the business!

It's all for the Lions Charity and is one of their biggest fund raisers of the year. Prizes were awarded and cups handed to the winners by the Mayor, followed by a welcome barbecue and drinks.

Between the three of us we have a good coverage of the event. Our hours of footage have been edited down to about fifteen minutes. I've just heard that this is too long they and need about 30 seconds for a commercial to encourage next year's entrants? Does that mean that all the rest was unnecessary? Please say no!

DOCUMENTARY COMPETITION

1st September 2017

Don't forget to enter your Documentary videos in our annual competition. Max 20 mins, on any subject. To be brought to the club night on Friday 1st September. Judging by audience vote.

Remember! (yet another plea)

Your contributions for Border Post are needed to prevent it from shrinking to two pages or becoming a bimonthly. Every member owns and uses video equipment or has used film equipment in the past. There are numerous factors that can create 'news' of today or past glories and they can be included in future editions! I will particularly need contributions for September and November as I have holidays coming up. Thank you.

FOR SALE!

iPad 4 mini, 200GB storage with iCloud and case. £375 ono. Please contact: peter@papercourt.co.uk

Message from your Chairman
John Mills:

The BBQ at Rita and Als ranch was a great success, great food, (Als BBQ skills are becoming legendary) and excellent company. Thanks to Rita and Al for hosting and all those that contributed and organised. Great day.

With sound in mind, some time ago I booked myself onto a course at the London Film School, (not as grand as it sounds) entitled "Location Sound". The write up seemed just what I needed to give my sound recording a boost.

On the day before I went, Brian mentioned that I might be surprised at my existing level of knowledge. How true that was.

The course did answer some questions I had about the setting up of recording equipment, and on the good old basis of "you don't know, what you don't know" I was really looking forward to being stretched.

Unfortunately it was more of an introduction to sound recording with only two hours of actual practical location recording. So I was a little disappointed. However I did make a point of getting answers to burning questions I had. Although not all the answers came from the instructor!

It really did come home to me that the skills and the depth of knowledge we have in the club is significant and could possibly be better tapped into, as I am sure someone knew the answers to my questions had I asked around.

The weekend just passed I formed part of a crew filming a Wedding - Brian, Philip and myself on sound and camera. Quite a large event with multi cameras, but a very well organised wedding. We had great fun shooting it, although very tiring and a long day. Weddings are always great fun as everybody is determined to have a good time. Looking forward to seeing the film once edited.

Onwards and upwards, don't forget to enter your documentary film for next months competition.

Film in Four

*Written by Peter Frost, Rita Wheeler and Philip Morley.

Techie note: All photos for this article were shot from the club screen during projection

At the brainstorming session it was decided that the local dignitary at a Garden Fete with his flies undone or 'the cuckoo clock is about to chime', as our Austrian character Herr Von Schlossen so nicely pointed out, would be a good story. Everyone noticed but did not directly mention it until Mrs BusyBody, excellently played by Jo Jones, came out and said it.

It was rewarding to see that Mike Sanders has done well for himself since he appeared as a tramp in Cube3, and has taken up the word of the Lord as a very presentable Vicar, the stalwart of any Village Fete.

Ivan Dally was Mayor Alderman Buttons and managed to track down a proper Guild Chain of Office for the OddFellows Guild which was thought very apt for the Oddbods. While Fred Hawkins as the Austrian, looked as though he'd break into a yodel and knee schlappen of de lederhosen, and Jo was resplendent with a bird on her head. Gillian, Al and Rita were the 'other parts' played by members of the cast.' What other parts of the cast were they playing?

All in all, a jolly good time was had in the dressing up box.

Dave Skertchly wrote the script and was persuaded (i.e. no one else put their hand up) to Direct. This was his Directorial debut and he did an excellent job. New member, Peter Stratford, who has only worked on documentaries before, was roped in, given a camera and was told to 'shoot'.

Dressing up seemed to be the key to cracking this theme, It stumped my group (Weyfarers) but other commitments knocked our group on the head, as was the case with the Klondikes.

Lost in Translation

by Philip and Peter

The Pioneers also found the time to squeeze out an entry, Lost in Translation, with a little help from that dressing up box and internet meetings using John's 'Go to Meeting' site, rather than travelling across their very spread geographic area.

After many failed attempts to come up with a credible exposure of the concept of Elephant in the Room, they hit on the idea of a spoof of the Miracles of Jesus.

Continues over

Film in Four maybe, but only two groups managed to find the time and members to produce an entry into the competition, which this year had the theme of 'An Elephant in the Room', decided upon at last year's Albany competition, and is a metaphorical idiom for an obvious problem or risk no one wants to discuss.

Zipadee Doo Dah

by Rita and Peter

The Oddbods comprised of Rita and Al Wheeler, Ivan Dally, Mike Sanders, Gillian Gatland, Fred Hawkins and Jo Jones (and was that Dave Skerchley appearing as an ostentatious Uncle Sam?) and new member, Peter Stratford, came up with a story based around the Village Fete.

A Priest, just back from Rome, and three Vicars are meeting at the Bishop's house to discuss the possibility of allowing "pole dancing" in the Church Hall, as you would.

During the somewhat disjointed conversation with each member having a different take on the word 'Pole', Brutus appears and attempts to be recognised, but no matter how many Miracles he tries, the Vicars all choose to ignore him.

Brutus becomes more and more frustrated and finally advises his father to "rub out the world" (portrayed by a clever piece of animation created in Photoshop) he has created and start again. Only this time to allow twice the time to create it.

Vicar Listeria (John Mills), a retired pole dancer, looked radiant in long blond wig, pin stripe suit and cowboy boots, plus a liberal application of lipstick! Geoff Bentley's vicar had a bag of plums in his mouth, so posh was he. But it was Philip's Italian vicar, Alphonso, that stole the show, as he looked uncannily like Peter Sellers in one of those Pink Panther films. Subtitles might have been helpful, though, so 'good' was his Italian!

The final edit of the script was passed to Philip who used a new piece of software called Storyboard 6 to develop a detailed shot list and storyboard. Armed with this, the somewhat depleted team of 4 pitched up at Philip's home to shoot the entire film in one day. With the whole team acting and being the film crew at the same time, they soon ran into logistical problems.

Their first mistake was to film the scenes out of sequence to enable Philip and Geoff, who were playing two parts each, to continuously record their parts so as to take over the filming and sound when the other two moved in front of the camera.

Technical difficulties, continuity errors, editing nightmares until 3.00 in the morning (Philip's favourite editing time of day!) worked around and they were finally happy with their efforts. However, their excellent sound recording by John was marred by the poor reproduction of the club speakers. New speakers are currently under consideration by the committee.

• Listeria, played by John, looking glorious in his long blond wig. • Alphonso, played by Philip, recounted his exploits at a local hotel which got him into trouble due to his unwittingly suggestive and rather amusing English. • Geoff Bentley's nose-in-the-air vicar. • Priest Peter Ives, despite internet problems during the planning meetings, in resplendent form • Oi! Look at my Miracles, demands Brutus, resorting to get God to rub out the World in his frustration.

But this was the popular winning entry by the club audience vote.

Both groups clearly had a lot of fun making their films and it is a shame that just the two groups could manage it. By renaming the competition Film in Four from Movie in a Month and previously Film in an Evening, each group had four months to create their masterpiece, but when it comes down to it, it is job enough to get people together for even one day.

As it was, the Oddbods were shooting theirs on the day of the BAFTA show and arrived at the club somewhat frazzled.

Ed: I have two questions: 1. How much food did this lot eat? Look at the gas cylinder line up! 2. Just what did Brian say to John before stuffing in a sausage that caused him to gesticulate so?

BBQ

Brian manned Al's 'new' (new to Brian, anyway) Bar in what was once the detective's sitting room in Cube3 and is now a 'proper bar' and Al's BBQ capabilities continue to be excellent. Marquee cover was provided as well and the atmosphere was as convivial as usual.

A vote of thanks to the Wheeler hosts who always put a lot of effort into this Club Social.

Simon beyond Klaus

Written by Peter Frost

Simon Christian has been the male lead, Klaus Bergman, in Brian O'Connell's World War 2 project, Sarah's War, now reaching a rough edit stage.

Austrian born Simon was a talented horse rider at the age of sixteen, and was competing for the Austrian National Equestrian Team at European and World Championships. But after an accident, decided to direct his performing talents towards acting and came to the UK for the best opportunities. This has evolved into the formation, with Melissa Dalton, of their theatre company, 'Outland Theatre'.

They have devised, co-written and are performing their inaugural play 'Towers of Eden' which gives a glimpse of the world of tomorrow as it would be if we don't act on what we know today about climate change (#towersofeden). Their concern is that there is insufficient action being taken world wide and they want to bring this to the attention of a wide audience through drama.

They are paying for this enterprise by 'crowd funding' (65% achieved at the time of writing) and will be performing at the Edinburgh Fringe Festival from August 21st to 26th.
